CURIOSITY

According to a historical legend, it seems that the name of this area is due to Charlemagne who, gone down to these territories to fight the Longobards, was so fascinated by these places that reminded him of the homeland that he decided to nickname it "small France". Actually, "Franciacorta" comes from "Franzacurta", in Latin "francae curtae", that is monastic "court", "franche" that means tax-free. It is in these clerical properties that in 15th century, it was developed viticulture and, from documented historical sources, we know that already in the 16th century were known the processes of fermentation in bottles for the production of sparkling wines, which in the 1960s finally translated in that classic method we know today.
