CURIOSITY

Lugana is produced in the southern area of the Garda, on a very clayey soil, which is what remains of the glacier from which was formed the Garda Lake.

It was a very important area during the Roman period as it was the natural passage between east and west. This territory was also dear to the poet Catullo and, in witness of this, there are not only the remains of his villa in Sirmione (whose ruins are still visible), but also his works, in which he mentions more than once the renowned Lugana.
