CURIOSITY

Its name comes from the color (which is ruby red with violet lights) and also from a legend, according to which Judas, after his death, regretted of such a misconduct and of his betrayal; Jesus, as a sign of forgiveness, resurrected him in flesh and bones in Oltrepò. Once the locals recognized him, they decided to kill him for the role he played in the passion of Christ, but he managed to save himself making them a gift restoring the vines from the disease that had affected them.

To thank him, the winegrowers dedicated him the name of the wine of that area, which has since become Judas' Blood.
